Get a golden glow for the holidays with Jane Iredale's Signature Gilded Collection. The limited-edition tin includes a trio of 24-karat Gold Dusts (gold, silver and bronze). Brush it on face, cheeks, eyes, hair, body, lips, nails — wherever you need a bit of sparkle! $38, janeiredale.com

The Libre Tea Glass makes it possible to have a soothing, relaxing cup of tea on the go. A mesh infuser is built into the top of the bottle. When you're done with the tea leaves, just twist the infuser off the top and put the cap back on. The inside is made of glass so there's no yucky plastic-y taste, and the outside is made of BPA-free poly. It's also insulated, so it will keep your tea hot without the possibility of burning your hands. $26.95, libreteas.com

With a variety of shapes and sizes, there is the right Sachi insulated designer lunch bag for anyone! We received three samples, each with a different style. Here's what we thought of them:

"I love the different handle options of this bag. Because I can carry it upright or flat, I don't have to worry about spilling and sloshing my lunch around. The shoulder strap is also convenient if I'm carrying a lot of other things. It keeps everything cool and I like the extra mesh pocket inside." Crossbody Camo, $17.99

"I love the shape of this insulated tote, and I can fit a frozen entree and a bottle of water inside with room to spare for pretzels and an apple! It has handles so I can carry it in my hand or, if my hands are full, a handy shoulder strap. The ladybug fabric is a bit kitschy, but it brightens my day." Fun Ladybug, $19.99.

{ Jane Hudson, 53, Greenville }

"I feel fit, fly and like I can carry my food anywhere. It's a great way to bring multiple items that vary in ingredients and content with me. It offers compartment space and style with a professional look, which is hard to find. It really encourages me to keep packing my lunches daily and bring foods ranging from cooked meals to raw vegetables and cliff bars. (I can even fit a 16.9 oz. water bottle in it.) It provides the opportunity to pack a healthy lunch in fashion." Speedy Orange, $24.99
